Peter Mullan is a Scottish actor and filmmaker who won Best Actor Award at the 1998 Cannes Film Festival and The Claim. Well, diving into his personal life, he is the father of four children. Among them, Sophia Mullan is Peter Mullan's daughter with his former girlfriend, Robina Qureshi. As Sophia is one of Peter's children, she has three half-siblings. They are Peter Mullan's children with his ex-wife, Ann Swan. Many of you may not know Sophia like her father because she's possibly not used to the limelight. So, we will be discussing Peter Mullan's daughter in today's article. Concerns Over Sophia In The Spotlight Peter Mullan's daughter, Sophia Mullan, is famous as a celebrity kid only. The little Sophia was born in 2008. She is certainly not used to in the spotlight, as mentioned above. Even though her dad is one of the finest actors in the film industry, she barely appears publicly in the media. Perhaps both of Sophia's parents are concerned about her getting close to the public eye. It looks as if they don't want anyone to know about Sophia so that no one interrupts her private and subtle life. Or maybe Sophia is not the kind of person who craves attention but is happy with private life. Since Peter Mullan does not have any social media handle, it's hard to say anything about his daughter. Robina Qureshi also rarely poses anything about her daughter on her Twitter. So, Sophia Mullan seems to be far away from the showbiz industry and spotlight. Sophia Mullan's Parents Are Not Together Sophia Mullan is Peter Mullan's daughter from his relationship with human rights activist, Robina Qureshi. Her parents are not together and had split from each other. The two probably could not work out their relationship and led to a breakup in the end. Sophia Mullan's parents are no longer together. Image Source: YouTube. After the breakup, Peter Mullan was also romantically linked to a gorgeous T.V. soap actress, Robyn Malcolm. But the romantic rumors between them might have faded with time. It seems like Sophia was living with her mother in the past, as Peter was accessing arrangements to meet his daughter. Furthermore, one of his friends even stated that Peter doted Sophia and was fighting Robina, his ex-partner to get access. Three Half-Siblings Sophia Mullan has three half-siblings, Paddy, Katrin, and Mairi. They all are Peter Mullan's children from his previous marriage with ex-wife, Ann Swan. Katrin Swan is one of her half-siblings who seems to be close to Sophia. According to The Sun, Mullan took his two daughters, Sophia and Katrin, to one of his launches too. Sophia's half-sister, Katrin, attended the Glasgow Gaelic School but could not speak a word of Gaelic back then. So, Peter said he wanted his daughter to go to the school as Scottish Heritage is so important. It might be that Sophia has a wonderful relationship with all of her half-siblings and loves spending time with each other as well. Let's hope that in the future, actor Peter Mullan will open up more about his children and let his fans take a glimpse at them. Name Meaning - Sophia Mullan Sophia also spelled as Sofia came from the Greek word, Σωφία, meaning 'wisdom.' For more updates on Entertainment, Celebrity Babies, YouTubers, and Movies & T.V. Peter is the son of Charles Mullan, a lab technician at Glasgow University, and Patricia, a nurse. Sadly, Mullan senior wasn't much of a father. Peter said: "To be fair to him, I believe that his whole generation were completely screwed. They were war casualties; they came back from the Second World War to no counselling, they were all running around barking mad." He later added: Peter Mullan in a Scottish national dress (tartan skirt/kilt) at the evening of the premiere of the film "The world is not enough" in Los Angeles - @Getty "I'm convinced they had no clue how to relate to their wives, their kids or themselves. I know virtually no one of my age who can remember a hug, or a smile from their father, or a "Let's go play football." Mullan was homeless for brief periods at the ages of 15 and 18. But, he still attended the University of Glasgow, where Peter studied drama and economic history. Despite suffering a nervous breakdown in his final year, Peter graduated, then taught drama at Borstals, community centers, and prisons, while becoming seriously involved in the leftwing theatre movement, which flourished in Scotland in the 1980s. His first full-length film, Orphans, won an award at the Venice Film Festival. In 1994, Mullan directed several episodes of the BBC TV series, Cardiac Arrest (a British medical drama series made by World Productions) which earned him a Best Director nomination from the Royal Television Society. In 1998, Peter was named Best Actor at the Cannes Film Festival for "My Name Is Joe." In 2003, Mullan won a Golden Lion at the 50th Venice International Film Festival for The Magdalene Sisters, listed by many critics among the best films of 2003, and a Golden Shell at the San Sebastián International Film Festival for Neds, and was nominated for BAFTA Award for Best British Film and European Film Award for best film. In 2006, he took part in the occupation of the Glasgow offices of the United Kingdom Immigration Service, protesting against the UKIS's "dawn raid" tactics when deporting failed asylum seekers. The protestors said to BBC director-general Mark Thompson: "Like millions of others, we are absolutely appalled at the decision to refuse to broadcast the appeal." They continued: Peter Mullan of the film "Outsourced" poses for portraits in the Chanel Celebrity Suite at the Four Season hotel - @Getty "We will never work for the BBC again unless this disgraceful decision is reversed. We will urge others from our profession and beyond to do likewise." In 2008, Peter played a lead role in the ITV series "The Fixer."
